Treasurer's Office Reform Ideas Laid Out by Alderman Jim Bohl

With the impending retirement of longtime City Treasurer Wayne F. Whittow and key top managers, the Office of the City Treasurer is ripe for organizational and operational changes that could significantly improve the way the office serves city taxpayers, according to Alderman Jim Bohl.

The attached white paper (City of Milwaukee Office of the City Treasurer: A Policy Plan for Reform) from Alderman Bohl includes “food for thought” for those who will lead the Treasurer’s office going forward. “The Treasurer’s office will lose its top leadership and well over 100 years of experience and institutional knowledge,” Alderman Bohl said.

“In my opinion this is the perfect moment to suggest important fundamental changes in how the Treasurer’s office serves taxpayers and the City of Milwaukee, and that is why this white paper has been drafted. I especially encourage anyone seeking the office of City Treasurer to read the document with an open mind,” he said.
